

Student Learning Outcomes

College: Liberal Arts & Sciences

Department: History

Degree Program: Master of Arts in History

- 1) Historical awareness: Master's students should be able to situate their research topic in its historical context.
- 2) Historiographical awareness: Master's students should be able to recognize shifts in interpretation of the research topic over time and place their research within the context of larger historiographical debates related to the topic.
- 3) Historical analysis: Master's students should be able to ask pertinent historical questions as well as identify and evaluate appropriate qualitative and/or quantitative written, oral, and electronic primary and secondary sources relevant to those questions.
- 4) Historical argument: Master's students should be able to construct sound historical arguments, substantiated by the evidence at hand.
- 5) Historical writing: Master's students should be able to present their thesis clearly and professionally and support it with well-organized and properly cited evidence (primary and secondary).